I am a member of Dining for Women, a nonprofit that supports women's empowerment and gender equality in the developing world through grants, advocacy, and global citizen education. I support a robust foreign aid budget that puts women and girls at its core. Studies show that foreign aid programs focused on gender equality have the highest return on investment that the U.S. can make for poverty reduction, global stability, and national security. Any cuts to this budget will be devastating to developing countries and will disproportionately affect women and girls who suffer the greatest effects of poverty. Please stand with me in opposing the administration's proposed cuts to the FY19 International Affairs budget.
