About Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC)

- Population is 102 million, more than 200 ethnic groups
- Third largest population of poor in the world, ¾ live on less than $1.90 per day
- Violence against women is common – the "rape capital of the world"
Life challenges for women in DRC

- Girls face daily risks often leading to abuse, exploitation, and denial of basic human rights
- Pervasive and deeply entrenched gender discrimination consistently excludes girls from societal benefits and protections
- Gender discrimination erodes girls’ mental health, education, income earning capacity, maternal and child health outcomes, and social support systems
The Project

- Year-round, art-based program for marginalized adolescent girls in Bujovu, DRC, in partnership with local organizations
- Provides girls with the essential life skills to keep themselves mentally and physically safe and healthy and develops them as leaders who advocate for gender equality in their communities
- Art-making, community building, and emphasis on gender equality helps 10- to 12-year-old girls stay in school
- Provides a mentorship program for older girls ages 18 – 24 who mentor the younger girls

DIRECT IMPACT: 15,623; INDIRECT IMPACT: 48,000
The Project

Year-round program has four components:

- Art and life skills sessions: builds skills and knowledge in health (including mental health), financial literacy, self-esteem, leadership skills, and civic engagement

- Public art engagement: participants create four large scale public art murals centered on gender equality issues

- Mentorship: ages 18 – 24 with a higher-than-average education level can receive training and stipend for mentoring

- Scholarship support for girls to attend formal school: tuition, school fees, and liaison with parents

Share your thoughts

1. How do you think the mentorship component of this program benefits both the young and older girls – mentors and mentees?

2. The murals offer visible proof of participation after the program ends. How does this add to the long-term benefit for participants and community members?

3. Do you think it is important that the girls come from the same general neighborhood? Why or why not?
